Walkie Talkie Market 2019

Description: -

The global walkie talkie market is expected to show robust growth in the next five years. This market is extremely competitive, with several large vendors competing on the basis of aspects like technology, new features, design, and device compatibility.

A walkie talkie, sometimes known as a handheld transceiver (HT), is a small radio signal transmitter and a receiver rolled into one. The principle on which it works is called simplex communication and since the device comprises radio transmitters, it can function perfectly without any network tower in the vicinity.

Walkie talkies have varying prices, with the cheapest analog versions being sold as toys, while other costlier versions which have features like waterproofing and digital interface being used in heavy industries or on boats and ships. Some of the challenges faced by this industry are the one-sided approach when it comes to communication, limitations of the range of transmission, battery issues, and intermittently interrupted communication, which will certainly have a negative impact on the growth of the global walkie talkie market in the next five years.

Market Segmentation:

On the basis of product type or device type, the global walkie talkie market can be broadly classified into two categories, analog and digital. From the end-user standpoint, it is divided into four segments, which are government and public safety, utilities, industry and commerce, and other users.

Regional Overview:

From the geographical perspective, the global walkie talkie market consists of North America, Asia-Pacific, Europe, Central and South America, and MEA (the Middle East and Africa). The important countries involved in this market in North America are the United States, Canada, and Mexico. In the Asia-Pacific region, the largest market shares are held by China, India, Japan, South Korea, Australia, Indonesia, Singapore, Malaysia, the Philippines, Thailand, and Vietnam. In the Europe region, the market is dominated by Germany, France, the United Kingdom, Italy, Spain, and Russia. In Central and South America, the most important player in this market is Brazil. In the Middle East and Africa, the dominant forces are the GCC or the Gulf Cooperation Council countries, Turkey, Egypt, and South Africa.

Industry News:

The rising demand for enhanced security equipment in the military and defense sector in response to increasing crime rates, militant activity, and other issues is what will allow the global walkie talkie market to grow steadily in the future. Additionally, manufacturers are constantly adding new user-friendly features to these devices, among which global positioning system, data tracking, encrypted communication, text messaging, and emergency alarm systems are a few. This is also anticipated to spur the growth of this market across the world. Apart from the defense sector, walkie talkies are also in high demand at public places like office buildings, schools, and residential properties which have need for security. In recent times, they are even used extensively to manage large events. Walkie talkies are popular even among children, for whom they serve as toys. Walkie talkies are now more affordable than ever before, and the global market certainly looks all set to expand.
