Market Segmentation:

World spirit consumption accounts for 16% of the global alcohol market and stands still. The fashion for the sparkling spirit will also remain. A vivid example: in 2010, in the UK, prosecco sales accounted for 10% of champagne sales. In 2020, it is expected that three times more prosecco will be sold than champagne. However, sparkling wines make up only 10% of world wine consumption. Most of all, on the planet, they love red: 54% of the world market.

Factors affecting the growth prospects:

The monopoly in the alcohol market is bad news for those who are struggling with alcoholism and soldering Belarusians," Romanchuk said. "Creation of a holding is a measure similar to the pre-sale preparation of enterprises in this sector. This is a measure to eliminate competitors and get their assets for a penny. This is a way to hide the poor quality of enterprise management and the opportunity for a couple of years to open a credit line to spirit producers - at the expense of taxpayers.

Major geographies:

The main regions that play a great role in the spirit market are

North America, Europe, Middle East & Africa, South America, China, Japan, India, and Others.

Latest News:

Currently, spirit producers can participate in international exhibitions and business missions subsidized by the state.
