PUNE, MAHARASTRA, INDIA, November 9, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Pickles Market:

Executive Summary

Pickling is a process to extend the lifespan of vegetables, fruits, meat or dairy products. The process involves brine for anaerobic fermentation or immersion in vinegar to preserve the desired products. In East Asian countries vegetable oil is also used along with vinegar in the process. The product is called Pickles. The pH of the pickle is less than 4.6, which helps to kill most of the bacteria and preserve the products for months. Mustard seeds, garlic, clove, and cinnamons are added to enrich the test, these natural spices and herbs have antimicrobial characteristics as well.

The global market for pickles is growing as it is very popular among people from different age groups. Pickles not only preserves the food; it also adds texture and taste to a product that attracts the consumers more. It also develops B vitamins that are good for health. Pickles can be dated back to Indus valley civilization. The process was developed to preserve food for every season and for long journeys. However, nowadays pickles are often consumed because people enjoy their taste, which is why the global market for pickles is growing rapidly.
