A sonobuoy is a portable sonar system that can be used to aid the exploration and discovery of submarines and underwater life. SONAR or Sound Navigation and Ranging uses sound waves to locate and detect different objects in a particular region. Active sonobuoys refer to sonar buoys that continuously emit sound waves that are then scanned for echoes. The sonobuoy is packed in a canister and is loaded onto a plane. Once the plane reached a specified area or location that is above a water body, the sonobuoy is ejected from the plane.

The active sonobuoy then enters the water to start its operation. If an echo is heard by the sonobuoy operator it means that an object has been located in a particular area. The beams of sound that are utilized by active sonars are highly directional beams which can determine the direction of the target as well as the distance from the target. Experienced sonar operators can identify the difference between the echoes that are produced when different objects are struck.
