The report shows that the increasing interest in personal grooming is one of the primary factors triggering the growth of this global market. Most of the Muslim customers are now using Halal cosmetics, compelled by their set of practice and religious obligation. This has encouraged key players in this particular market to introduce new personal care and cosmetic products for Muslim consumers. The consciousness among people about the ingredient used in such products is increasing, which, in turn, increased the demand for such products.

These products are free from animal fat, chemicals, or other animal-derived ingredients. Halal Cosmetics and Personal Care Products are hygienic and pure than regular products. That's why the adoption rate of such products is quite more, especially among the Muslim population. This can be driving factor for this market during the forecast period. On the other side, preference towards usage of beauty products and growing number of Muslim populations are also expected to propel the global market in the coming years.
