PUNE, MAHARASTRA, INDIA, November 14, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ --

Engineered stone is one kind of composite material that is made up of crushed stone bound together by a type of adhesive. The common stones that are used for the production of these products are quartz and marbles. The application of these products depends upon the original stone that is being used. Quartz-based product is seen primarily being used for kitchen countertops, while the most common application of marbles being indoor walls and flooring.

Quartz is said to be the most abundant material on planet Earth and one of the hardest. These features made manufacturers see its potential use as a surface material more than 50 years ago. Since then, the popularity of quartz slabs have grown massively. Even in manufactured form, the strength of quartz makes it highly resistant to scratches, abrasion, dents, and even acids without the need for sealants. The environmental impact of these materials are low as well. The finished product from quartz is non-toxic and non-allergic and is said to last a lifetime, thereby removing the requirement of replacing the same. The report published on the global quartz slabs market revealed the growth to be at a notable pace. The valuation of the quartz slabs market was further stated to surpass its previous valuation.

The surge in construction of residential properties and the renovations being made to the existing ones is expected to be one of the biggest factors of growth for the market of quartz slabs. The expanding population rate and the rising tourism rate in various countries is boosting the investment scope in construction projects and subsequently boosting the market.
