Segmentation

Maca powder, as a product, can be segmented by type, by application, and by region.

By type, maca powder has three differentiation – white to yellow, light pink to dark purple, and light grey to dark grey. The difference in the colour of the powder comes from the degree to which the roots are dried. The main use of maca is that of providing the human body with vitality, vigor, and immunity. Each colour of the powder has a different purpose and is used specifically for it.

By application, maca powder is used in the production of health drugs, health foods, and nutritional supplements. Maca, when used in precise concentrations, is useful to alleviate many of the body's ailments like anaemia, hormone imbalances and also for enhancing energy and athletic activities. With a focus on health taking a priority in the minds of people, maca has found widespread use in the preparation of nutritional supplements. Claims are being made regarding the effectiveness of maca powder for gaining muscle mass, to boost energy, endurance, and increase strength.

Regional Analysis

An in-depth regional analysis of the maca powder market split provides the consumption value and volume of the product by regions. There is a strong focus on the key factors that influence the growth of the market – growth potential, drivers, industry-specific challenges, and risks. The report presents a marketing landscape that gives a clear breakdown of the maca powder market geographically. The split in the market is shared by United States, South America, Canada, the APAC region, China, Japan, Korea, Southeast Asia, India, Australia, Europe, the Middle East, and Africa. The market share of each region is studied to analyze the reason for the fluctuations between the various regions. Although Peru remains the major producer, the consumption of the final powder version is widespread.
