

Vegetable oil prices could rise 40% next decade - LMC completes new Oilseeds & Oils Report

LMC International forecasts prices, production costs, supply & demand, and more on the world's most important oilseeds and oils.

NEW YORK CITY, NEW YORK, USA, November 21, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- World-renowned economic consulting firm, LMC International, has the latest and most critical market information, including price forecasts, production costs, supply & demand, and more on the world's most important oilseeds and oils, including soy, palm, and canola/rapeseed. There is a relentless demand for vegetable oil and LMC's celebrated report answers pressing questions such as "what will happen to soy meal prices if soy oil has to fill a gap caused by a moratorium on palm oil?"

Through this report, available now, LMC provides independent data and analysis that helps industry players enhance their strategic planning, evaluate investments, and better recognize where to allocate resources.

Test your strategic thinking against an external, independent, expert view. How does your business outlook for the coming years stack up against LMC's global perspective of the market? This is a valuable opportunity to take stock of where you are, and where you're headed. New for 2019 is LMC's Interactive Demand Model that lets you produce and compare your own scenarios.

LMC encourages interested parties to subscribe to the report by contacting Michael Schwartz at LMC's New York office: email or phone: +1 212 586-2427.
