Market Overview

Gabion boxes are large often cylindrical-shaped boxes which are filled with concrete, rocks, soil, and sand. These are important building blocks for roads, dams, military, and landscaping applications. Their use also varies on end-use. For example, in dams, metal-based gabion boxes are popular for strong foundations. These are also used for temporary relief from natural calamities like redirecting the flow of rivers for particularly vulnerable structures. The rising investment in infrastructure like highways, dams, ports, and increasing vulnerability to these due to climate change are expected to create new opportunities for players in the gabion boxes market.

According to a new report by the American Society of Civil Engineers, nearly $3.6 trillion will be needed by 2020 to address concerns about the ageing infrastructure in the country. So, the upcoming future promises robust opportunities for players in the global gabion boxes market.

Regional Analysis

The global gabion boxes market report will cover key regions of the globe, including North America, Europe, Asia Pacific, Latin America, and Middle East & Africa. According to news reports, at least 1680 dams in the United States pose a significant threat to inhabitants in the area. Additionally, according to Stanford University's National Performance of Dams Program, over a thousand dams, often privately owned have failed in the last four years. The rising opportunities in major economies, including the US, China, and India, are expected to drive considerable growth for players in the gabion boxes market.

Industry News

A project named 'Sea Defense Project' with funding of £1 million has been announced to protect the capacity of Benbecula airport. The project involves the large deployment of gabion boxes to protect 435 yards of coastline. The project is expected to provide much-needed protection for airport runways from storms and increasing tidal waves. One of the main causes for this project is the rising coastal erosion, and the main project also expands to various other coastlines like Cane Garden Bay to protect inhabitants and current infrastructure. While low costs of gabion boxes are ideal for protection for coastlines, their possible ineffectiveness over long-run can provide an opportunity for innovation for players in the global gabion boxes market.
