Introduction

Global Pet Food Ingredients Market

Dogs, cats, fishes, birds and other animals, birds and reptiles that can be domesticated fall under the 'pet' category. Pets do not fare well when fed the regular human diet that is rich in carbohydrates and trans-fat. Depending on what kind of pet is domesticated, the food requirements of the same vary. This is the basis of the pet food ingredients market. This market includes different types of ingredients that are in demand to create pet food and the types of these ingredients used.

Pet domestication is a term that involves treating a pet like a family member and giving it love and attention. The number of families that have one or multiple pets has increased drastically in the last few decades. All these people look out for packed pet food and this drives the global pet food ingredients market. Pet nutrition is another recently developed term and pet owners are aware of the nutritional needs of their pets. This, along with available disposable income, creates increased demand in specialty pet food.

This global pet food ingredients market gives an overall analysis of the market's positioning and its growth in the years to come. The forecasted period in this study is between 2018 and 2025. The market positioning, market drivers, opportunities and restraints, production values and product prices are all compared and discussed and results are published in easy-to-grasp charts and tables. This report has the advantage of publishing critical insider information about the market's scope that is unavailable elsewhere.
