Market Overview

Shea Butter is derived from a deciduous tree called Shea. It is found in the deep forest of Africa. It is a deciduous tree and is the only species of Vitellaria. The tree has some medium-sized deciduous fruits that are hard covered with a juicy material within. This material is extracted out of the fruit and is used as Shea Butter. The trees grow these fruits only twice a year and hence it becomes quite expensive for its limited availability.

Shea Butter is used in different sectors. It is primarily used as a moisturizer but there are several other beauty products also that are prepared from Shea Butter. Besides these oils are also prepared that are used for skincare purposes. It is used in food items too in place of cocoa butter but the taste is absolutely different. As a result, it is often rejected as an ingredient in the food industry.
