Market Overview

A sealing device that is manufactured from deformable materials and is used to fill the gaps between different mating surfaces is called a gasket. Plastic gasket is made from different plastic materials. They are widely used for different applications due to their elastomeric properties. They can undergo deformation and not be permanently damaged or lose their properties. This has made them very popular as they form tight seals and prevent leakage either to or from the objects when they are compressed.

Gaskets are normally designed in the shape of a sheet or ring. They create a pressure-tight seam between the objects that it is fixed to and rely on a compression seal to prevent leakages of wither liquids or gases. Plastic gaskets are malleable in nature and take the shape of the solid surface between which it is placed. The seals formed by gaskets are resistant to both pressure and temperature fluctuations. They are available in a large number of specifications.
