The global middleware software market is expected to grow to $46.56 billion at a rate of 6.8% through 2022. Movement of manufacturing organizations towards Industry 4.0, the latest revolution, which focuses on automation, interconnectivity, real-time data, and machine learning is expected to benefit the middleware software market in the forecast period. However, data privacy concerns and security risks are expected to limit the growth of the middleware software market.

The middleware software market connects enterprise applications or software components and provides an infrastructure that enables the development of business applications. Middleware software also facilitates high availability functionality and provides core services such as transactions, concurrency, messaging, and the SCA framework for service-oriented architecture (SOA) applications, threading and security to an enterprise. Middleware software seamlessly integrates all the business processes, applications, and platforms to help businesses reduce their total cost of ownership (TCO) and increase their return on income (ROI).
