Activated charcoal is extensively used to remove organic chemical substances and colorants, which reduces trace substances like chemicals. This further contributes to the growth of the activated charcoal desiccant market across the globe. It is also used as a polishing step in order to remove dissolved non-biodegradable and organic compounds, which is then followed by biological pre-treatment and physical processes in order to remove solids along with biological oxygen demand. Activated carbon also helps in the removal of impurities from water through surface adsorption. The product is considered the most cost-efficient for water treatment. The extensive use of activated charcoal in water treatment has further triggered the demand for activated charcoal desiccant across the globe.

Moreover, the surging demand for activated charcoal from the food & beverage sector is also predicted to create new growth opportunities for the activated charcoal desiccant market across the globe. Major players involved in the particular market are coming up with strategies such as M&A and collaborations, which is further estimated to augment the market growth across the globe.

Segmental Analysis

The global activated charcoal desiccant market has been segmented on the basis of type and application.

By type, the global activated charcoal desiccant market is segmented into particle powder, and others.

The global activated charcoal desiccant market by application is segregated into delicate instruments, cameras and film, food packages, electronic devices, and medical devices and pharmaceuticals. Of these, the food packages segment is likely to create maximum demand for activated charcoal desiccant due to increased demand for packaged food across the globe.

Regional Insights

Geographically, the activated charcoal desiccant market spans across China, Japan, North America, Europe, India, and Southeast Asia.

Considering the global scenario, the Asia Pacific region is considered to command the largest market share globally, with China witnessing massive gains. China is regarded as the second largest consumer of activated carbon worldwide. The product is generally used in water treatment, healthcare, food & beverage, automotive industries, and in industrial processing. The food & beverage industry in China is enormous and plays an integral part in the country's economy.

The waste water sector demands for activated charcoal mainly due to coal, steel and iron industries, which require fresh water for daily activities. These factors are expected to encourage the growth of the activated charcoal desiccant market during the estimated timeframe. Moreover, the northern part of China has less fresh water reserves, which augments the demand for waste water technologies, thereby offering humungous opportunities for the activated charcoal market, which in turn is likely to impact the activated charcoal desiccant market growth curve positively.
