The CBD Oil or Cannabidiol was discovered in 1940, is a phytocannabinoid. It is a part of the 113 identified cannabinoids that are present in the cannabis plants and holds its record for its accountability for up to 40 percent of the extraction from the plants. The clinical research in 2018 on the CBD Oil included some preliminary studies that included pain, cognition, anxiety and movement disorders. The Cannabidiol can be used by various methods that include the methods of inhalation by way of smoke and vapor. It can also be used as a spray for cheek and mouth in the form of aerosol spray. It is also supplied in the form of CBD Oil containing only.

Cannabidiol (CBD) is a natural extraction of cannabis plants. The use of special extraction methods yields pure cannabidiol, which has high nutritious contents like vitamins, amino acids, terpenes, chlorophylls, fatty acids, and several other phytocannabinoids. The pure CBD hemp oil is often directly taken as a source of nutritional supplements. It also finds its application in different body care and skin products. The advancement in the market has led to the evolution of different CBD hemp oil products like drops, capsules, and chewing gums.
