LONDON, GREATER LONDON, UK, January 27, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The global soap and other detergents market is expected to grow at a rate of 7.5% and reach $133.85 billion by 2023. The introduction of innovative new products is a key factor leading to growth of the soap and other detergents industry. However, soap and other detergent providers globally faced uncertain regulatory environments in the historic period. There are certain regulations aimed at reducing the release of toxic chemical substances into the atmosphere during the manufacturing process of soaps and detergents.

The soap and other detergents market consists of sales of soap and other detergents and related services for removing dirt from human skin, textiles, and other solid surfaces. Soap and detergents are chemical compounds that refer to surface active agents in general. These products are made from animal fats or vegetable oil and are used to clean a solid surface. Surface-active agents are categorized in four groups: anionic detergents, cationic detergents, nonionic detergents and ampholytic.
