

SonoPath Opens New Hands-on Veterinary Ultrasound Training Facility

SonoPath is the most recommended hands-on ultrasound training program in North America, and offers an innovative training approach to veterinary ultrasound.

ANDOVER, NJ, US, February 16, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- SonoPath LLC announced today the opening of SPVEC - SonoPath Veterinary Education Center, their new hands-on veterinary ultrasound training center. .

SonoPath teaches SDEP® (Sonographic Diagnostic Efficiency Protocol) - a trademarked, numbers-based, repeatable protocol that enables standardization of the sonographic scanning process to maximize the image sets of traditional and alternative approaches. The results are increased clinical confidence and rapid scanning proficiency. The SDEP® Abdominal protocol is a 17-step progression that ensures complete abdominal ultrasound images. The SDEP® Echo protocol is a 7-step progression that optimizes every region of the heart to evaluate function velocities, pressures and chamber sizes.

“With the opening of our new veterinary ultrasound training facility, we’re able to expand our reach and help more DVMs and technicians become excellent sonographers. Ultimately this leads to improved diagnostics and better patient care,” says Dr. Eric Lindquist, DMV, DABVP, Cert. IVUSS, and CEO at SonoPath LLC. “The goal was to create a comfortable environment that feels like home, where you can slow down, connect with colleagues, and improve your diagnostic efficiency.”

“I attended an SDEP® Echo CE with SonoPath and without hesitation, I can state it was the best CE I have ever attended! From the questions I had prior to enrolling for the course, travel arrangements, to the beautiful facility (and delicious food!), the CE event was amazingly well-curated and executed! The quality of education and instruction was superb. In addition, the follow-up and support I have had after the course is equally unparalleled. SonoPath is doing it right!” Donna Spector, DVM DACVIM-Internal Medicine
