

Cinequest and Kaiser Permanente Present Thrive Award to Shannon Harvey about her Journey of Healing through Meditation

My Year of Living Mindfully chronicles Shannon Harvey determination to find a treatment using the cutting-edge techniques of mind-body medicine.

SAN JOSE, CA, UNITED STATES, February 27, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Every year the Cinequest Film & Creativity Festival, in conjunction with Kaiser Permanente, honors one film for its life-affirming themes and resonance with the Kaiser Permanente Thrive Award. This year the award is being bestowed on My Year of Living Mindfully.

Shannon Harvey had her dream job as a radio journalist at age 24 when she was diagnosed with a devastating autoimmune disease. Her immune system had become hyperactive and was attacking normal, healthy tissues. Her muscles and joints were inflamed and she was told if her disease continued to progress she could end up with organ failure, or wheelchair bound.

My Year of Living Mindfully chronicles her determination to find an effective treatment using the cutting-edge techniques of mind-body medicine. Cinequest will be its North American premiere.

Is it really possible to ease suffering and promote physical and mental healing using the simple practice of meditation that can be done by anyone at any time or anywhere?”

Shannon Harvey

Shannon wondered: is it really possible to ease suffering and promote physical and mental healing using the simple practice of meditation that can be done by anyone at any time or anywhere? The film follows Shannon's worldwide journey from her home in Australia to Manhattan to the dusty refugee camps of the Middle East and then back Down Under where she learns from an Aboriginal elder about the ancient practice of Dadirri — deep listening and silent awareness.

She undertakes a year-long experiment with herself as the subject that synthesizes the works of leading scientists with the ways of mystics. Her goal is to learn if meditation can dramatically improve her health and well-being, or is it just another over-hyped self-help fad? My Year of Living Mindfully is sure to inspire countless individuals to not only find their own inner strength and peace but also see the world in new ways. It is a must-see for those seeking insight and questioning their place in the world.

CINEQUEST™

Cinequest will be from March 3 to March 15, 2020

Shannon Harvey had her dream job as a radio journalist at age 24 when she was diagnosed with a devastating autoimmune disease.

Previous winners of the Kaiser Permanente Thrive Award have included such stirring films as Clownvets (2019), the inspiring story of legendary Dr. Patch Adams and his team's trip to Guatemala on a mission of "humanitarian clowning" to help veterans suffering from PTSD; Pick of the Litter (2018), which follows the lives of a litter of Labrador Retriever puppies from birth through their training to be guide dogs for the blind; and The Bullish Farmer (2017), the story of a Wall Street investment banker who turned his back on high finance and transformed his life by becoming an organic farmer.

My Year of Living Mindfully director, producer and star Shannon Harvey is available for interviews and will receive the award at the Hammer Theatre in Downtown San Jose on March 5 at 7 p.m. after the North American Premiere screening of her film.
