

Kastl Law, P.C. Now Helping Truck Accident Victims

One of Dallas' best at helping those with personal injury has expanded its services.

DALLAS, TEXAS, US, March 17, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Representatives with Dallas, TX-based Kastl Law, P.C., announced today that the law firm is now helping truck accident victims in their legal fight.

"We are glad to offer legal help to truck accident victims," said Krisi Kastl, founder and spokesperson for Kastl Law and added, "If you have been involved in an accident with an 18-wheeler truck, we are here to help."

"18-wheeler trucks, also known as big rigs or tractor-trailers, are implicated in tens of thousands of accidents in the U.S. each year," highlighted Kastl and went on to add, "Because of the significant weight of 18-wheel trucks, they do not stop as quickly as a car and accidents involving 18-wheel trucks often produce serious personal injury or wrongful death."

There are several reasons why 18-wheeler truck accidents occur. Sometimes, 18-wheeler truck accidents occur due to driver inattention, such as when the truck driver is talking on a cell phone or texting while driving. Accidents involving tractor-trailers also happen due to speeding, failing to observe traffic signals, and general driver negligence. 18-wheeler accidents may be the result of poor maintenance. Sometimes, these accidents are caused by product defects.

"18-wheeler trucks are subject to a detailed set of federal regulations, state licensing, registration and inspection requirements," said Kastl.

Kastl added, "Operators of 18-wheeler trucks must comply with the Department of Transportation (DOT) regulations, which govern the maximum number of hours a truck driver may operate an 18-wheeler truck. Additionally, there are stringent requirements for pre-trip and post-trip inspections of the truck and its systems. Depending on the truck's cargo, the truck may also be subject to regulations governing the safe transportation of hazardous materials."
