NORWALK, CALIFORNIA, UNITED STATES, March 17, 2020

/EINPresswire.com/ -- Women's History Month (celebrated in March) highlights the contributions of women to events in history and contemporary society. Sadly, women often put themselves last when it comes to themselves, their goals, their dreams and their health – which includes their hearing.

Many women feel hearing assistance will cost thousands – forcing them to choose between themselves, their dreams, and the dreams and desires of their loved ones. Jamal Ayache, CEO of assistive sound and vision technology group Serene Innovations (www.sereneinnovations.com) wants to change that way of thinking by showing how effective hearing assistance technologies can cost less than $100.

With that, Jamal wants women (and men) to be aware of the early signs of hearing loss, which, according to Web MD, can result in depression and memory loss if left unaddressed.

Early signs of hearing loss include:

Early signs of hearing loss include:

1. Children's voices sound muffled or unclear. When aging takes a toll on your cochlea, the inner ear organ that helps you hear, the cells that detect high-pitched sounds are usually the first to fail.
2. You can't follow conversations in noisy places. Age-related changes in how the brain processes sound make it harder to ignore background noise.
3. You're exhausted after social events. When you can't hear all the sounds of speech, your brain has to fill in the gaps to make sense of what others are saying.
4. You're watching people's lips instead of making eye contact.
5. Your ears feel clogged (but are not waxy)

6. The volume on your TV keeps creeping up. If others in your house complain that the TV is too loud, it's time to get your hearing checked.
