As per the orders of the DOE, schools may not open their doors again until April 20th at the earliest. While providing staff a week to plan and adjust accordingly, SKHOV has announced the commencement of its daily Internet Education Program which will allow its teachers, therapists, and special services providers to offer distance learning courses to all enrolled students. SKHOV will also counsel parents and families to offer hope and reassurance.

Each student has received a custom-made schedule providing support and therapy throughout the day. Families have also been given an individualized instructional packet to help carry over materials from the curriculum at home.

The distance learning courses will help students maintain the skills they have learned in the classroom and prepare them for learning new skills while also keeping them safe from the spread of COVID-19.

“At this time, it is critical to encourage calmness, vigilance and offer prayers so that we can overcome our fears and have a more positive daily itinerary,” Dr. Weinstein said.
