According to Victor Sierra, Torino Capital's CEO, with this new addition to our team, Torino Capital continues its dedication and focus to broaden the scope of our product mix and global reach.

The real estate business has historically been an exclusive club, lagging in technological innovation and accessibility for retail investors, but in the last five years, we have seen significant disruption led by forward-thinking startups.

Some companies have changed their approach offering individuals a frictionless means to invest in commercial-grade real estate deals – with greater simplicity, transparency and risk mitigation measures. With a small amount, investors can have, hands-on project oversight, short-term investment periods for greater liquidity, a rigorous, data-driven vetting process to identify and offer the most promising investment opportunities and equity protection on their investment.

Alternative investments open new avenues for financing real estate for property owners and developers alike. Some investment portfolios may include income-generating multifamily properties, commercial real estate, retail, and mixed-use properties, with a focus on projects in developing cities, as they have proven to perform well despite economic downturns.
