Description:

The Faith Machine is a novel of psychic espionage, combining Cold War action with modern sensibilities, in the vein of The Men Who Stare at Goats, Legion, and the X-Files. Fusing superhero and spy tropes, this thriller portrays a diverse team of psychic agents with powers linked to their mental disorders. Scattered and on their own, the team's eccentricities become their strengths as they race across the country opposing spies of all nations. In the end, they do their best to do the right thing. Heavily based on Cold War psychic warfare and the international intelligence community research, this novel considers those truths and turns them on their heads.

Playing Game currently under development. Stories have always been Tone's first love. Fiction, religion, biographies, gossip, gaming, and history all go into Milazzo's slow cooker and come out as stories. Milazzo has been a marine, taxi driver, teacher, assistant to scientists, and coder. At his own admission, this breadth of experience has given him a little knowledge about a lot of things, good and bad. He lives in San Diego with his wife Melissa Milazzo (author of Time is a Flat Circle) and two dogs, all of whom, according to Milazzo, are more capable than he is.
