

Women Encouraged to Apply Now for Business and STEM Scholarships

Mission Sisters Who Work provides scholarships for training, certification, and college education for women and girls interested in business or STEM

DES MOINES, IA, UNITED STATES, April 20, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Mission Sisters Who Work, a 501(c)3 charitable nonprofit, provides women self-empowerment and emotional intelligence books and training, as well as scholarships needed to take charge of their lives so they can close their own gender, opportunity, and pay gaps. While all women benefit from the books and programming provided, scholarship opportunities are offered primarily to those from underprivileged communities with limited access to funds.

Currently, Mission Sisters is accepting scholarship applications from women and girls interested in attending Summer and Fall 2020 training and education programs. The nonprofit awards three categories of scholarships. Multiple scholarships may be awarded in each category listed below. The organization also offers sponsored and named scholarships, providing opportunity for individual donors and businesses to create a legacy, impact the world, and be an inspiring force for good and real change (please contact Mission Sisters for more details.)

Those interested in applying for any of Mission Sisters' scholarships can learn more information and complete the online scholarship application at missionsisterswhowork.org or cherylodonoghue.com. For additional details, read on. Scholarships are funded by general donations received by the organization, as well as book royalties from Mission Sisters co-founder, Cheryl O'Donoghue, in addition to a portion of proceeds from her for-profit business, Emotional Intelligence Leadership Resources.
