Every year, Variety curates its Entertainment Education Impact Report, which includes a list of the top film programs and schools in the United States and across the globe. Top institutions listed alongside VFS include New York University, USC's School of Cinematic Arts, the Beijing Film Academy, and Moscow's Gerasimov Institute of Cinematography, the world's oldest film school.

In collecting the list for 2020, Variety notes the impact the COVID-19 pandemic has had on the industry worldwide. The publication celebrates the fact that many institutions, including VFS, are implementing remote learning options to allow aspiring creatives to keep pursuing their dreams.

"Now, more than ever, it's a time for creativity to reign supreme, a time for artistry to thrive and a time for aspiring filmmakers of stripes and solids — be it screenwriters or directors — to harness this time of solitude and draft what could become the blockbusters, TV series and indie films of tomorrow," Variety states in its report. "Not only are these film schools and their faculty prepping their students for successful careers in the entertainment biz, but they are guiding them with structure and encouragement and artistic expertise through one of the most turbulent eras in modern-day society."
