

Beth Zastawny Speaks Out Against Multiple Sclerosis

In a recent interview, Beth Zastawny discussed her career in the financial industry and her experience living with MS

LUDLOW, MASSACHUSETTS, UNITED STATES, April 28, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Beth Zastawny recently spoke out in an exclusive interview for Thrive Global. In particular, she spoke about her career in finance, her work with nonprofit organizations, and her battle with Multiple Sclerosis.

Residing in Ludlow, Massachusetts, Beth Zastawny is a CFO in the manufacturing sector. She has 14 years of experience working in public accounting and 15 years of experience working as a CFO for privately held manufacturing companies.

Beth Zastawny is also an advocate for helping those with Multiple Sclerosis. Having experience dealing with it every day, Beth's goal is to find a way to make life easier with those who have the disease. She is a philanthropist and donates to many different nonprofit organizations to support people affected by MS, including the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

"I fight a daily battle with an enemy that is silent in attacks and strikes at any time. I have had to come to terms that there is no cure for MS. I have had to accept this disease and I am learning instead of fitting my life around the disease I must fit the disease into my life. When the enemy attacks I must remind myself that I am not lazy – I am tired, I am not stupid – I have cognitive issues and I am not angry – I am in pain," says Beth Zastawny.

"I cannot control how MS will manifest in my life, I am committed to fighting this disease with the continued support of family and the best medical team."

Beth also writes blog posts about the illness. She recently published a blog about different nonprofit organizations dedicated to the battle against MS and about how MS affects daily life.
