Casey Jordan

“We're excited to launch our new website and even more excited to expand our treatment options for women in British Columbia and throughout Canada,” explained Casey Jordan, Chief Marketing Officer. “Loved ones and women who may suffer from drugs, alcohol, or other forms of addiction are encouraged to visit the website and then reach out for a private, confidential consultation.”

Interested persons can visit the website at <https://georgiastraitwomensclinic.ca/>. The menu icon at the top right opens up an information-rich environment on how the Clinic works and the services offered. Those who want to learn more about drug and alcohol treatment, for example, can visit <https://georgiastraitwomensclinic.ca/drug-alcohol-treatment/>. That page explains that in the Clinic's drug and alcohol treatment programs, clients receive daily group therapy and a minimum of one 1-1 counseling appointment per week. By combining Meaning-Centered Therapy, Cognitive Behavioral Therapy, and Narrative Therapy, the Clinic is able to offer an array of individualized treatment options based on the needs identified by the client and recommendations of the clinical staff. A second example is the page on Occupational Trauma or PTSD treatment services at <https://georgiastraitwomensclinic.ca/occupational-trauma-ptsd/>. That page explains that therapies in the trauma program are designed to help clients build self-regulation skills to deal with dissociation, anxiety, depression, anger, and other symptoms of trauma. These therapies are also designed to help clients make sense of suffering and pain so they can go forward in pursuit of a meaningful life.
