

AviationManuals Publishes Guide to Minimum Equipment Lists (MEL)

Available for Download

WASHINGTON, D.C., U.S.A., May 18, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- AviationManuals, the leading provider of digital operations manuals, has published a complimentary guide to understanding Minimum Equipment List (MEL) requirements.

"An MEL is the best and most widely accepted way to determine the conditions under which a flight can be commenced with inoperative equipment," said AviationManuals CEO Mark Baier. "This complimentary MEL guide helps flight departments understand where and when an MEL is required, and why they should consider getting one."

“

This complimentary MEL guide helps flight departments understand where and when an MEL is required, and why they should consider getting one.”

AviationManuals CEO Mark Baier

The MEL Guide describes:
Differences between a Master Minimum Equipment List (MMEL) for aircraft types and a custom MEL for an operation's actual aircraft.
Requirements for operators based on state of registry and area of operation.

Value of a Nonessential Equipment and Furnishings (NEF) program.

The new AviationManuals MEL Guide can be found at <https://aviationmanuals.com/get-your-mel-guide/>.

The image shows the cover of the 'MEL GUIDE' (Minimum Equipment Lists) by AviationManuals. The cover is blue with a white airplane silhouette in the background. The title 'MEL GUIDE' is prominently displayed in white, with 'MINIMUM EQUIPMENT LISTS' in smaller text below it. Two key questions are highlighted in orange: 'Am I required to have an MEL?' and 'Am I going to want an MEL?'. Below these questions are three circular icons: a broken piece of equipment, a seat, and a checklist with a checkmark. The tagline 'Manuals and SMS simplified' is at the bottom right of the cover. The text 'Complimentary MEL Guide Available' is centered below the cover.
