"There are hundreds and hundreds of microbes on your mobile phone. You could be carrying the enemy with you without knowing it," Major Dr Rashid Al Ghafri, director of Training and Development at the General Department of Forensic Sciences and Criminology at Dubai Police, told

Khaleej Times recently.

The research, conclusions of which are published in the Journal of Travel Medicine and Infectious Disease, showed that mobile phones generate heat while being used, and that heat stimulates the microbes to stay for longer and reproduce.

"Thus phones are likely to be the 'Trojan Horses' in spreading virus," the officer pointed out.
