For most of us, coding might just seem like a simple pass time activity that is done by that chisel guy, some of the time, most of the time, all of the time. When shifting their attention between contexts (complex coding tasks and distractions), they can lose up to half a day to get back to where they were. Hungry, tired, as they might be, skipping off most of the chores in the day, they still strive to bring innovative ideas to life, thus helping the companies grow and evolve by intrinsically linking their success to their client's success.

They were judged and ranked based on client feedback, their past work experience, adaptability with technologies and agile approach, and ramping up quickly to hit the agreed-upon schedule and budget.
