In most cases, a property owner can be found responsible for a shooting that occurs on their property due to unsafe conditions or negligent security.

Lead Attorney Jason Brenner

Under Florida law, people who are allowed on the property are owed a duty of care. If an invitee is hurt in a shooting at someone else's property, the property owner can be legally liable for the shooting.

After establishing that the property owner is responsible, the next step is proving that the property owner's negligence led to a breach of their duty of care. In other words, the property owner failed to take adequate security measures to prevent the shooting.

"We thoroughly investigated the shooting, including police reports and security measures to establish liability to achieve the $1 million settlement," says Lead Attorney Jason Brenner. "We're proud that our client can now focus on recovery and rebuilding his life after this traumatic experience."

The experienced premises liability lawyers at SteinLaw are well familiar with the several components that are needed to find a property owner liable in a shooting. They help victims and their families seek the compensation they deserve.
