Edward Hausgen featured in one on one online interviews.

In his recent Inspirery interview Edward shares what he thinks has made him successful in his industry.

"Being upfront, honest, and constantly communicating with my clients. I've never had a complaint because of it. As well, I work hard to reach the goals I set out for myself and I am surrounded by people that love and care about me." He goes on to say that getting a referral from someone is the "ultimate compliment."

Edward gives the readers of Kivodaily.com some advice on what they should look for when thinking about becoming a financial adviser.

"I would advise the said person to shadow a highly respected financial adviser and see what that day in and day out life looks and feels like."

Something he would change about the industry if he could would be the to loosen multitude of regulations now put in place.

"The easing of regulations recently has given brokers more flexibility within the industry. This flexibility will afford brokers much need streamlining within the broker system."
