OpenBox started way back in 1995 as a supplier of computer parts, trading out of a warehouse in Surrey, British Columbia. After falling in love with the consumer and wholesale market, it was swiftly purchased by Watts, now the proud business owner. It didn't take long before new premises and expansions were required to keep up with demand and this had escalated into the OpenBox.ca website and the showrooms throughout Canada in Surrey, Vancouver, Coquitlam and Tsawwassen opening in July as well as four stores in Calgary, Alberta there expansion plans are looking at Vancouver Island and Toronto. Openbox also has a U.S. arm, which sells only wholesale. All products sold by Openbox are available throughout all locations and online at (www.openbox.ca).

"Being an owner of a business is a huge responsibility to the people that make the business work – be it the staff or customers – and I take this very seriously and am committed to them," states Watts. "As people are always going to want best value for their money but without compromising on the quality of the product, as a business, OpenBox has a meaningful role to play. At our leading processing facility, agents rigorously inspect, test, and clean the products to ensure they work just like new. A bargain is not a bargain unless it's something that you bought at a cheaper price with no compromise on quality."
