We are excited to partner with spa owners, salon proprietors, and even the owners of massage therapy clinics as we reboot the economy of Westchester county,”

As the New York City metro area struggles to reopen in the aftermath of the Coronavirus, many spa owners are struggling to keep up with the incredible demand for linens in their businesses. Many now need multiples of towels, sheets, uniforms, and other cloth-based products for their staff and their customers.

“We are excited to partner with spa owners, salon proprietors, and even the owners of massage therapy clinics as we reboot the economy of Westchester county,” explained Paul McDonald, CEO of Stamford Uniform and Linen. “Our new post outlines some of the ways that business owners can outsource their linen needs to us, and thereby reopen for business more easily.”

LINEN SERVICE NEEDS FOR SPAS, SALONS, AND MASSAGE THERAPISTS NORTH OF NEW YORK CITY

Here is the background on this release. Life is beginning to return to normal here in Westchester County, New York. Whether the business is in White Plains or Hartsdale, Yonkers or Larchmont, or anywhere else in the area north of New York City, owners are fortunate to have the opportunity to begin to reopen their business post Covid-19. However, nowadays business owners will need to use a lot more linens than they did before the pandemic hit. Many spa owners as well as those who run massage therapy offices or salons are finding that whereas before COVID-19 they used just a few linens, now they use quite a few more linen products than they did before. How so? First, their employees may be wearing uniforms or other types of coveralls and need to change them between clients. For example, many skincare spas are now requiring employees to change their outer uniforms between each and every customer. This means a quintupling in demands for these linen products. Second, the use of towels and sheets has also dramatically increased. Each customer might have used just one or two towels before COVID-19 and now they are using multiples. Third, there is the end-of-the-day clean up. Many spas are now having a very thorough cleaning before and after each day's work.
