month earlier as Bitcoin value sweeps past $10,000. Due to the COVID-19 outbreak, investors are seeking safer investment opportunities in cryptocurrencies to get back in the game and the Bitcoin investment hasn't disappointed them as its worth exceeded the $10K mark earlier than expected. The Australian Company has decided to give off the commissions earlier, as pandemic tightens its claws into the global markets.

"Early payouts can help create a positive image for attracting attention since people are afraid to risk their money during the pandemic," says the Astro Finance spokesperson. "We think it can help our investors in regulating their lives affected by the COVID-19," he added.

Astro Finance guides its clients regarding investments in digital wealth as well as wealth management. While economies across the globe are subjected to downfall amidst the pandemic, Cryptocurrency Investment experts at the company have managed to furnish different investment strategies for the investors.

After the boom in the cryptocurrency market capitalization in 2017, many investors became millionaires. However, 2020 changed everything as the market instability reached record levels. As the world is now easing lockdowns, the cryptocurrency is becoming a de-facto currency. Constructive developments include higher retail trading and improved institutional trust.

Michael Casey, the chief content officer at CoinDesk says, "Bitcoin still has the potential to not only be used on a broader scale as a form of payment by consumers but also be adopted by institutions and governments on several levels."
