The global demand for dietary supplements is powered mainly by rising health and fitness concerns. Rising demand worldwide for healthy medicinal products is also likely to drive growth in the dietary supplements industry. In addition, increasing demand for sport industry supplements is likely to have a positive impact over the projected time span on the profit margin level of the market. Stringent rules and regulations, however, can hinder business development. Nevertheless, it is predicted that emerging markets, combined with rising per capita spending on healthcare in developed countries, will create avenues in the coming years.

Various types of dietary supplements' form include powder, capsules, tablets, and others. In 2019, tablets segment led the global market for dietary supplements among those types. It accounted for over 40 percent of all-in 2019. In addition, the tablets segment is expected to experience the fastest growth over the coming years. This rise is primarily due to rising market demand for tablets, along with easy availability of convenient dosage patterns. The category Capsules is the second largest market type in 2019 and is also expected to show potential growth over the forecast period.
