

Multi-talented April Doyle's Sentimental Song, Tears Are Gone, Submitted For Grammy Nomination

Tears Are Gone Submitted for Best Pop Performance

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, UNITED STATES, July 24, 2020

/EINPresswire.com/ -- April Doyle's song, "Tears Are Gone," was submitted for a Grammy Nomination: Best Pop Performance. Already receiving a great deal of praise, submitting for a Grammy nomination is a natural next step for the pop song.

"Tears Are Gone" represents hope in the messiest and most emotional situations. April shares her personal story of her own hope, of something good coming from her heartache and healing. The post-breakup song is for anyone who's felt overwhelmed by a relationship. April says, "We can move on and be okay."

"Tears Are Gone" recently came to life in a music video posted on YouTube, with help from renowned producer Kevin Flourney.

The multi-talented entertainment mogul's latest project, "April and the Velvet Room," is in partnership with her friend and producer, Kevin Flourney. The Velvet Room provides viewers with a combination of classic/neo/jazz/funk vibe through dazzling performances, all delivered by April and different artists who perform regularly with big names, such as Stevie Wonder, Steely Dan, Rod Stuart, and Babyface.

"Tears Are Gone" is available now on all major platforms. For more information, follow April Doyle on Instagram.
