“AABD is delighted to work with ADCG to support bank directors in meeting their responsibilities in data and cyber governance”, David Baris, President of AABD, said.

During the coming year, AABD and ADCG plan to produce a survey and analysis of the common practices of bank boards in data and cyber governance. “The industry is grappling with what kind of involvement that bank boards should have in data and cyber governance. Even though much is written about the need for top leadership to be involved, how that actually is implemented is not clear. Sharing common trends in the industry will provide stakeholders a baseline for future improvements.”, says Intriago.

About AABD

AABD was founded in 1989 in the midst of the S&L crisis to meet the information, education and advocacy needs of individual bank and savings institution directors. Bank regulators expect financial institution Boards of Directors to make informed policy decisions and to act independently to supervise the institution. One way for CEOs and their Boards to demonstrate that the Board is both informed and independent is through membership in the American Association of Bank Directors (AABD)—the only banking trade association in the United States which exclusively serves the information, education and advocacy needs of individual directors rather than their financial institutions.

AABD members enjoy a wide variety of benefits and may earn significant discounts on their D&O insurance through the Director Certification Program. We invite you to utilize the resources of our AABD website and encourage you to join AABD.
