Waste Paper Recycling Market

From the past few years, the global paper recycling market has been experiencing tremendous growth owing to the drastic outcomes of the overconsumption of natural resources on the environment. In the waste paper recycling process, the local vendors & small-scale industries collect the waste & garbage from residential, industrial, as well as commercial zones. The waste paper is then sorted from the entire piles of garbage and the sorted waste paper is then shredded, pulped, filtered, de-linked, and trimmed before consumer use. Waste paper products preferred for recycling include corrugated papers, newspapers, packaging papers, wrapping papers, and magazines, among others. Besides securing the raw materials, the waste paper recycling industry offers a range of benefits, such as limited water, energy, and landfill space consumption.

Key Drivers:

Rather than dumping or burning, the waste paper should be recycled as the waste paper has been accumulated in enormous quantities across the globe and the two aforementioned processes are energy as well as resource consuming. The hazardous impact on the environment with the piling up of waste paper for longer time and inefficiency to manage that waste have remained the two leading causes urging the various state governments to implement stringent rules associated with waste management. Consequently, this would flourish the global waste paper recycling market.

The “corrugated cardboard” under product segment holds the maximum revenue share of the global waste paper recycling industry

Corrugated packaging is a widely adopted packaging type across the globe. It is considered as multi-layer packaging, as the cardboard is formed of different layers of line board organized in a special pattern that offers firm and safe packaging of products. Almost all the lifestyle items and consumer products, such as toys, electrical appliances, gift items, food items, and even large & heavy items including machinery as well as furniture, are packaged in corrugated cardboard boxes.
