Are You Ready To Eat Bugs? Aly Moore Shows You How In This Buzz Worthy Bug Recipe Cooking Series Premiering August 10th / The ON! Channel

NEW YORK, NEW YORK, UNITED STATES, August 6, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- When it comes to eating bugs most think of the reality show Fear Factor or the 1991 episode of Seinfeld, where Jerry famously declares that he thinks the worst part about being blind would be "not being able to tell if there were bugs in my food. How could you ever enjoy a meal like that?"

In the weekly series Cooking With Critters which will be premiering August 10th, Insect Chef Aly Moore, creates several delectable looking dishes, and shares recipes all while believing that not only will eating bugs begin to rise in "foodie Culture", but that it will truly become a booming food industry.

"When asked why I eat bugs, I turn it around and ask, why not. Bugs make a lot of sense. They are healthy, super nutritious for you and super sustainable, and when cooked right they are delicious." She continues by explaining that once you try it, you will get used to it like anything else. "Eating a bug is more similar to riding a rollercoaster for the first time...You are a little nervous at first, maybe a little afraid, maybe it's something you have never done before, and when you get on the rollercoaster you may be thrilled and it could be super fun or it may be a little scary still, but at least you tried it. "

Eating bugs is not as uncommon as one would think. In many countries around the world, these insects are more than a prize, they are culinary delicacies with more than 1900 edible bugs species available around the world. "It's kinda cool to be at the formation of what will be a major industry," she added.

Cooking with Critters is produced by Lisa L. Wilson (2x Emmy® winning producer), Garcelle Beauvais (acclaimed actress and reality star) and award-winning Executive Producers TÉ Double VÉ International Productions.

"Garcelle is a true talent both in front of and behind the camera, and a top-notch human being. I am excited for the world to see this show and catch the bug for eating Critters" said Brian J. White, President of The ON! Channel"
