

Is drug abuse taking a vacation during COVID-19 or is it still here with us?

Midst the stresses of the COVID-19 pandemic, the Foundation for a Drug-Free World steps up its drug education outreach.

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, USA, August 13, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- COVID-19 issues have absorbed the attention of all Americans for the last six months, in our lives and in the media. But, what about the other “pandemics?” Did they take a vacation?

The answer is no when it comes to the pandemic of drug abuse that the United States has been struggling with for years.

Concerned that our countrywide drug epidemic will continue to take a backseat due to the severity of COVID-19, Ms. Thalia Ghiglia of the Foundation for a Drug-Free World DC chapter stressed, “We need to work fast and furious on both issues.”

Our Drug-Free World Chapter is determined to continue working with others during the COVID-19 pandemic to do what we can to bring the truth about drugs to as many as possible.”

Therefore, the chapter has been reaching out to local police community officers, drug prevention centers and the DC Department of Behavioral Health, joining with them in revitalizing drug education programs in DC using the Drug-Free World materials, while balancing the protocols of COVID-19.

While some have theorized that perhaps there is a correlation between the virus pandemic and a rise in drug abuse statistics in the US, experts have noted that drug overdoses were going up prior to COVID-19.

According to the US Center for Disease Control (CDC), drug overdose deaths jumped in 2019 to nearly 71,000 in the US. This wiped out the slight decline in statistics the country experienced in 2018.

The report goes on to say that more than 35 states saw drug overdose deaths increase while 13 states recorded declines. South Dakota reported the largest spike at 54%, followed by North Dakota at 31% and Alaska at 27%.

Fentanyl and other synthetic opioids are involved in more than half of all projected deaths with cocaine and methamphetamine-related deaths also on the rise.

It has been noted that due to the COVID-19 stay-at-home and no-travel orders around the country, some people have become restless, bored, lonely and unproductive or have been struggling with losses. Perhaps this has led to a rise in drug abuse statistics among those already involved in drug use.

“Drugs are dangerous. They can destroy your health, productivity, creativity or worse: they can ruin your life and even kill you. This message needs to be clearly understood and not minimized. Our Drug-Free World chapter is determined to continue working with others during the COVID-19 pandemic to do what we can to bring the truth about drugs to as many as possible,” concluded Ms. Ghiglia.

The Foundation for a Drug-Free World is a nonprofit public benefit corporation that empowers youth and adults with factual information about drugs so they can make informed decisions and live drug-free.

The “Truth About Drugs” materials all available online and hard copies can be ordered.

Personal stories of those who were on drugs shared in the “Truth About Drugs” documentary video.

Through a worldwide network of volunteers, 50 million drug prevention booklets have been distributed and tens of thousands of drug awareness events have been held in some 180 countries. The Foundation's "Truth About Drugs" public service announcements have been aired on more than 500 television stations. The materials and activities have helped people around the world learn about the destructive side effects of drugs and thereby make the decision for themselves to not use them.
