"For years, the legal technology calendar hasn't started on Jan. 1, it has started in late January/early February during our annual gathering in New York," said Doug Austin, editor of the eDiscovery Today blog. The event will feature expert presenters from around the globe and EDRM project workshops open to those seeking to learn or join a project as well as those presenting project work products. The expo will feature custom booths with private tables for live, in-person conversations and information sharing that will be available to EDRM partners and companies servicing the legal technology space in security, eDiscovery, privacy, governance, risk and compliance and more.

Networking opportunities will include a virtual Jumpstart Community Reception on Feb. 1 at 4 p.m., a virtual Drinks with Doug & Mary on Wednesday at 4 p.m., a virtual Bloggers' Lunch on Tuesday at 12:15 p.m. and other opportunities for serendipitous private and small-group conversations (all times are in Eastern Daylight Time).

"While the way in which organizations and individuals connect in our COVID-constrained world has changed drastically during the past year, the need to connect remains as strong as ever in our eDiscovery ecosystem," shared Hal Brooks, chief executive officer of HaystackID. "As a long-standing partner and advocate of the EDRM, we are excited to be an integral part of their innovative ExpoCOM event and appreciate their leadership in establishing a virtual forum for educating, engaging, and most importantly, connecting data and legal discovery professionals. We look forward to the event and the opportunity for connection that it will bring and wish the EDRM team the best as they continue to serve our eDiscovery community."

"Our ExpoCom offers a guaranteed opportunity to renew relationships with farflung friends and clients and to create new meaningful connections and brand awareness in the midst of our virtual pandemic world," said Mary Mack, CISSP, CEO and chief legal technologist at EDRM.
