

World Economic Forum partners with Religious Freedom & Business Foundation

Religion's impact is increasing globally on economies, politics and societies. New strategic intelligence partnership focuses on role of religion.

WASHINGTON, DC, UNITED STATES, September 8, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- We are pleased to announce today a new partnership with the World Economic Forum's Strategic Intelligence platform. The platform features research and analysis from leading global think tanks, universities, civil society organizations, and research institutions through its network of content partners. The Religious Freedom & Business Foundation has joined the Strategic Intelligence Content Partner network to contribute towards insights relating to the Role of Religion.

"As religious diversity and religious populations grow, so does their impact, creating new challenges and opportunities for societies, governments and economies," says Dr. Brian Grim, president of the Religious Freedom & Business Foundation (RFBF). "For a number of years RFBF has been working with the World Economic Forum (WEF) to help business leaders and policy makers better understand the role of religion in today's world -- both the contributions of religious freedom (for all) as well as challenges posed by religion-related violence and intolerance," Grim said, "and we're glad to see this collaboration take this new step forward."

Jim Landale, Head of Content and Partnerships, Strategic Intelligence, World Economic Forum, states that "the role that religion and inter-faith dialogue can play in tackling global challenges, whether related to the environment, healthcare, peace and security, or supporting fair economic growth, is under-appreciated in some quarters. And, understanding the intricate independencies
