"People look at you a little funny when you tell them you started your career as an entrepreneur by studying to be a police offer," says Wilkinson. I Learned How to Interview and Interrogate Says Bobby Wilkinson Ottawa Entrepreneur Police officers have to interview people on a daily basis. Whether they're taking a statement or investigating a crime, police officers are trained to ask insightful questions and judge responses as accurately and quickly as possible.

"There's such a negative connotation to the word 'interrogate'," says Bobby Wilkinson Ottawa entrepreneur. "But when you think about the actual skills involved, you can see immediately how they translate to the business world. You have to be able to think on your feet, stay several steps ahead of the conversation, be a good judge of character, be able to read body language, keep a poker face, and ask the right questions."

Obviously, the context of the interview makes all the difference. "You have to be able to adapt to the situation. You don't interview a victim the same way you would a suspect. You learn how to communicate and get the information you need without causing further harm, even in difficult circumstances," says Bobby Wilkinson Ottawa.

I Learned the Importance of Teamwork Says Bobby Wilkinson Ottawa

"When you're a police officer, you don't work alone. You work as a team with your fellow officers, the coroner, the morgue, the forensic lab, the hospital, the schools - you're working for and with the community," says Bobby Wilkinson Ottawa entrepreneur. "If you try to go it alone, people get hurt, suspects get away, evidence is lost. No matter what your petty differences are with your coworkers, you put them aside when you get the call. That's what being part of a team means."
