

Forest Fire Aggravates N95 Mask Shortage

FEDERAL WAY, WA, UNITED STATES,
September 14, 2020 /
EINPresswire.com/ -- Forest fires across the western United States have brought smoky conditions to much of the country. The hazardous air quality has led to an uptick in demand for face masks already supply strained by the ongoing Covid-19 pandemic. Sunny Bay, a trusted maker of effective pain relief products, has seen a surge in N-95 mask sales since the wildfires started.

"We understand that many families and businesses are currently in need of high-quality face masks to protect themselves from smoke," explained Sam Wright, CEO of Sunny Bay. "We stocked these N-95 masks for extremely vulnerable people to protect themselves from the coronavirus, but these masks also happen to be effective for protecting against wildfire smoke."

Each N-95 mask is hypoallergenic and offers a layer of melt-blown fiber to filter out small particles. Additional features include elastic earloops, latex, and fiberglass-free materials, and an adjustable nose piece. These N95 masks, cloth face masks, and
