Global Clinical Trial Ancillary Supply Chain (CTASC) leader Ancillare, LP announced it has closed several multi-million dollar three-to-five year contracts with major global pharmaceutical companies.

The series of large wins marks another step toward Ancillare's diversification goals, which aim to grow its offerings worldwide. Earlier this year, the company announced it had secured a multi-million dollar debt financing deal with Fulton Bank, which enabled progress toward enhancing its technology services, expanding to new verticals, and beginning to execute a long-term acquisitions strategy.

In tandem with the long-term, structured capital we've secured, these new contracts support our commitment to deliver innovation across the supply chain and throughout the entire clinical trial space.”

“This milestone reflects Ancillare's orientation toward growth and creates further opportunities to expand our services,” said Dr. Joanne Santomauro, Chief Executive Officer. “In tandem with the long-term, structured capital we've secured, these new contracts support our commitment to deliver innovation across the supply chain and throughout the entire clinical trial space.”

The new business wins add to Ancillare's extensive portfolio, which now includes fifteen ongoing COVID-19 trials for which the company is providing CTASC management.

“With the urgency the pandemic has imposed on the pharmaceutical world, clinical trial Sponsors need reliable supply and equipment solutions,” Santomauro added. “We attribute our recent successes to the fact that we are not just another supplier, but instead a true partner with a consultative and forward-thinking approach. These wins are a testament to Ancillare’s end-to-end consultative approach to CTASC.”
