Over 7 million companion animals end up in shelters in the US every year. Pet overpopulation and rescuing animals are the two main reasons for pets entering shelters. Veterinarian Paula Bullock spayed and neutered thousands of pets to try to prevent this exact situation.

Many other animals are removed from negligent environments. Removing the animals from these desperate situations involves veterinarian care and then rehoming the animal. Paula Bullock's veterinarian practice provided the critical care these animals needed. The alternative could've been euthanizing the animal.

Dedication and work of veterinarian Paula Bullock and her team at her nonprofit George's Place Animal Sanctuary help these animals find homes. They facilitate the medical care the animals needs and provide a place for people to look for their next pet.

There is a cost associated with adopting a pet, but it is much less expensive than buying a pet from a breeder or pet store. The cost of adoption covers the medical care and spay or neutering of the pet that was provided by teams working with veterinarian Paula Bullock. This decreased cost is a great benefit for people looking to add a pet to their home without a huge price tag.

Veterinarian Paula Bullock commonly shared with the owners of her patients that the benefits of pet adoption go beyond just giving an animal a home. People with pets have increased health benefits from walking a dog or playing with a cat. Pet owners are shown to have a decreased level of stress compared to people without pets. There's also a proven correlation with decreased loneliness for households with pets.

Pet adoption would not be possible without the dedication of veterinarian Paula Bullock and organizations like George's Place Animal Sanctuary. Pet adoption is the best way to add a pet to a household for financial reasons, for health benefits, and for saving pets from being euthanized in animal shelters.
