EINPresswire.com/ -- The intensity and uncertainty that COVID has brought have impacted everybody. Great Parenting Simplified (GPS) has seen additional calls for support during the pandemic. More and more families are breaking down, with mental illness, coparenting strife including divorce, and a rise of serious behaviour issues.

Great Parenting Simplified - Pandemic Parenting Movement

Many people know families who are struggling but don't know the best way to help. GPS set up the Pandemic Parenting Movement, for people to come together and let parents know that we acknowledge that parenting is hard, and parenting in a pandemic can be nearly impossible. Parents and caregivers need to know that people understand and that there is a real, tangible village to support them.

We believe that parents need help more than ever,”
Jacqueline Green, founder and CEO of the nonprofit cooperative, GPS.

“We believe that parents need help more than ever,” said Jacqueline Green, founder and CEO of the nonprofit cooperative, GPS. “Over the past 10 years, we have delivered effective and pragmatic help online, whether it be through community support, training for a specific need such as anxiety or co-parenting, one on one coaching or group support. We know our program is effective and can provide long term solutions.”

People who want to support the movement can go online to <https://fundrazr.com/GPS-2020-2H> and meet parents who have benefited from finding their GPS. Here people can join the movement and donate to get help themselves, or for someone they know, or put their donation towards general funds for families in need.

The movement seeks to raise $75,000 to train more coaches so that more families can be helped and to help remove financial barriers to taking the program.
