CORNWALL, CONNECTICUT, UNITED STATES, October 14, 2020

/EINPresswire.com/ -- In a recent interview with Thrive Global, Jonathan Vakassian spoke about drawing from positive life experiences and the importance of staying motivated. He shared what he has learned throughout his career, advice for recent college graduates, and the biggest life lesson he has learned.

With decades of experience, Jonathan Vakassian is an entrepreneur and automotive sales and service manager.

He owns an automotive sales, mechanic, and towing business and is currently located in Cornwall, Connecticut.

In the interview, Mr. Vakassian explained that one habit that has made him more productive as an entrepreneur is his focus on working smarter, not harder, in order to prioritize a healthy work-life balance.

He also shared one of the biggest life lessons he has learned.

“My majority of work experience has allowed me to have extensive contact with the public and with customers. This has taught me the importance of customer service, like having a smile on your face, being an open, friendly person, communicating and addressing somebody in a friendly way to make a customer feel welcomed,” said Jonathan Vakassian.

“Ultimately, I try to remember the way I would want to be treated if the roles were reversed or the way you would want your family to be treated.”

Further, Mr. Vakassian explained that he hopes to leave something of a mark to show that he was able to help people throughout his personal and professional life.

“I want to teach the values and characteristics that I have learned from my father and throughout my life onto my children and to be able to positively impact them further,” shared Jonathan Vakassian.
