company witnessed accelerated growth throughout the COVID-19 pandemic and now transports more than 70 percent of cannabis product in the state, as a partner to 13 Pennsylvania cultivators out of 18 in operation. Headquartered in Philadelphia, Talaria is a national company specializing in compliant cannabis transportation, cash processing, and lab testing services for the legal cannabis industry.

“Since Pennsylvania's medical marijuana program started, we have delivered over $250 million dollars-worth of product and have established partnerships with more than 95 percent of dispensaries in the state,” stated Ari Raptis, CEO and Founder of Talaria Transportation.

The company has expanded its network to meet market demands with sales expected to double in Pennsylvania to $400 million - $500 million and reach $1 billion in sales within three or four years, according to Marijuana Business Daily.

Since its establishment in 2017, Talaria has increased its ancillary foothold to 16 state markets across the Midwest, Mid-Atlantic and East Coast. The company has set itself apart from other competitors in the sector by hiring nearly 130 former police officers and military veterans to its security team and investing in digital technologies to increase traceability and prevent contamination during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Talaria has facilities in Columbus, Ohio, and Scranton, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, with plans to expand into Albany, New York and Richmond, Virginia. For more information, visit Talaria.com.
